The Abolition of Slavery British Colonies; its late inauguration in the French West Indies, are so many indications of the general progress. Thus the Anti-Slavery movement of our time is one of the vital impulses of the discusslous now so rife respecting the Rights of Labor Land Ownership and its proper Limitations, Pauperism, its Causes and their proper Cure, &c. &c. When Chattel Slavery shall have been utterly abolished, the work of the Anti-Slavery move ment will have been barely commenced. Many a once realous advocate will grow weary and fall by the way, but the work will not stop, until Education for every child, Opportunity for every capacity, and a just Recompense for every exerion shall have become fundamental and general laws of all civilized communities.

- Having taken some part in the preparation of Mr. Clay's Writings for the Press, we shall briefly say that we should not have done that had we not deemed them worthy of public regard and systematic preservation. With the vigor, direct ness and strength of the author's style, our readers must already be familiar. Of the philanthropy, generosity and devotedness of Mr. Clay, we trust no one entertains a doubt. In emancipating his own Slaves and in braving for years the frowns and the speers of the eminent and powerful all around him, he has manifested a sincerity which only those who have exceeded his sacrifices for the Right have any plausible claim to question -Unlike others warring in his own sphere in the South, he has not emancipated his slaves and at has produced great sensation. once decamped to some region where his act cure. GREENVILLE, Bond Co. III. June Horace Greeter, Esq.-Dear Sir: May not a man be purdoned for admiring many traits in the character of that warm-hearted philanthropist, Gerrit Smith, without desiring to be thrust upon the same ticket as the exponent of sentiments he does not enter tain, and the advocate of measures he cannot approve? I am aware that the public take very little interest in this matter, but I have among your readers many friends that might be gratified to see the subjoined correspond-ence; and since it presents, for your well-filled columns that might be granted to the series of your well-filled columns, the important recommendation of brevity, you may be willing to give it a place. Streness of my friends for declining the profered distinction.

I could not overcome my reluctance to run upon a ticket with a man, who has been selected by a party-however respectable or meritorious, as the exponent of principles or measures with which it is impossible for me to coincide. I may be thought over-scrapulous, but to my apprehension it would be injustice to that party as well as repugnant to my own feelings to allow my name to be placed in such a connection.

There are other considerations which have their influence in determining my opinion upon this subject, but the one suggested is enough; and I feel assured that the friends whose partiality would bestow upon me a distinction to which I have never aspired, will respect my scruples and forgive me for declining it.

With sincere respect, your friend, WM. S. WAIT.
